

THE K300

Welcome, Comrade, to the Soviet Submarine K300, The Kashalot. The Kashalot is the best submersible device Soviet technology is able to produce. And you have been volunteered to be part of the crew.

Unfortunately, things have not gone well. A critical failure has caused problems all over the submarine and you are all in danger of being crushed in the icy depths of the ocean.

Luckily, help is on the way. If you can keep the K300 from exploding or being crushed for merely one hour then you will all be rescued. How difficult can that be?

The three main possible points of failure that you know of are the Engine, the Pressure, and the Torpedoes. The Engine is finicky at best and tends to break down every few minutes. If it is not fixed in time, it will completely short out and you will all die.

The Submarine's hull is also somewhat fragile and you need to keep track of the pressure, lest it crush the sub and you all die. The Torpedoes have a bad habit of arming themselves and the tubes are completely inoperable. If you cannot disarm the torpedoes in time they will explode and you will all die.

But do not worry too much. Surely the Motherland has put their best and brightest in charge of maintaining the delicate systems that stand between your life and your death.

THE CREW

Captain Yuri Popov: A very competent man. You would never say that he had a drinking problem... to his face.

First Mate Andrei Yablokov: A stickler for rules.

Political Officer Lara Borzakovskaya: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Political\_commissar
What do you mean that this document does not support hyperlinks, Comrade?

Chief Engineer Victor Bronislav: A very superstitious man.

Torpedo Specialist Kostya Borzakovsky: He can be a little hot headed at times.

Reactor Specialist Georgi Karpov: Seems unhappy about something.

Supply Officer Kolya Kholodilnik: Seems to be under a bit of stress...

Dive Specialist Alexander "Sasha" Andropov: Can leave the sub safely.

Medical Officer Karl Segeiyevitch Galenin: Your main source of healing.

Cook Evgeny Markov: Actually, a pretty good cook. Everyone loves his cookies.